The Moore & Van Allen Environmental team brings deep experience and nuanced environmental knowledge in environmental regulatory compliance, enforcement and litigation to its diverse client base—ranging from manufacturers to environmental consultants, municipalities, trust departments and a variety of other businesses.

Boasting advanced scientific and legal training and know-how in environmental issues, our noted environmental attorneys publish and lecture widely, teach at noted universities and have served as expert witnesses on complex environmental issues. Additionally, our attorneys have prior experience as in-house environmental counsel for multinational corporations, the U.S. Department of Justice and the federal EPA.

Team members provide sophisticated, cost-effective representation to both companies and individuals in enforcement actions, toxic tort litigation and prosecution of environmental crimes. They've also represented companies and groups of companies in environmental class-action suits and before Congress and state legislative bodies.

Their expertise extends across the full spectrum of environmental issues and actions, from hazardous and radioactive waste to air pollution and groundwater, from noise pollution and land use to coastal development and wetlands, from environmental crimes to environmental lobbying.
