Litigation Member Neil Bloomfield was recently quoted in article on Law360.com entitled, "NYSE $5M Fine Shows Milliseconds Matter to SEC." The article addresses the SEC's recent settlement with the New York Stock Exchange and its parent company NYSE Euronext resolving allegations that market data was sent to paying customers before it was released to the broader investing public. Neil is quoted as saying, "What is material in the trading sector today is really a short window of time. The SEC is making a real push to pursue issues in the financial sector that call into question the fairness of the system." To read the complete article, please click here.
