Kevin’s practice focuses on health care-related transactions and health care regulation. Kevin helps clients navigate and understand the complexities of health law and brings a pragmatic approach to his transactional work—advising clients of the relevant regulatory and commercial risks so they can make informed business decisions.

Kevin has worked on health-care related transactions of all sizes, from those valued under $1MM to those valued in the hundreds of millions of dollars that span multiple jurisdictions. Kevin’s transactional experience includes mergers, acquisitions, joint ventures, management services arrangements, and other contracts.

Kevin has worked with many health care providers, including large physician groups, hospitals, behavioral health agencies and ASCs, providing relevant regulatory guidance with respect to their business objectives. His regulatory experience includes HIPAA, Stark, Federal Fraud and Abuse, Corporate Practice of Medicine, and Health Care Licensure.

In law school, Kevin served as Managing Editor for the Duke Journal of Comparative and International Law and was a Margolis Scholar with the Duke-Margolis Scholars Program in Health Policy and Management. Prior to law school, Kevin worked for a supplier of diagnostic imaging technology as a new business development manager and demand analyst.
