Tiffany Payne represents clients facing white-collar criminal prosecution, enforcement and regulatory matters, and high-stakes business litigation. Having practiced for more than a decade in New York and Washington, D.C., Tiffany understands how to effectively navigate constantly evolving regulatory requirements and develops creative legal and business-minded solutions to complex and highly technical issues.

Tiffany's investigations practice includes representation of individuals, financial institutions (including registered broker-dealers and investment advisers), accounting firms, self-regulatory organizations, and publicly traded companies in inquiries brought by the U.S. Department of Justice, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority, and state attorneys general concerning a variety of matters, such as anti-money laundering, insider trading, accounting independence and standards, the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, and state and federal securities laws and regulations. Tiffany has also managed and coordinated internal reviews and provided regulatory advice to clients seeking to manage their potential exposures.

Tiffany also has experience assisting clients in a range of commercial disputes in federal and state courts, including matters involving federal securities laws, the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Practices Act, the Truth in Lending Act, the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, the Fair Debt Collections Practices Act, state and federal unfair and deceptive acts and practices laws, state consumer lending laws, breach of contract, business torts, and fraud.

Outside of her white collar and financial services-related practice, Tiffany is committed to pro bono work relating to reproductive rights, criminal justice reform, and immigration. Tiffany has drafted amicus briefs in state and federal courts on these topics and has represented clients in petitioning for asylum.
