Corporate Compliance Insight's Maurice Gilbert chats with Charlotte Litigation Member Valecia McDowell, Co-Head of the White Collar, Regulatory Defense and Investigations practice at Moore & Van Allen and a recent addition to the firm's management committee. Valecia discusses her new role, some of the biggest risks facing companies today and what makes a good leader in the article published online August 14.

The success of our team at Moore & Van Allen PLLC has been built on our commitment to fostering constructive, respectful relationships between ourselves and our clients on the one hand and regulators and law enforcement representatives on the other hand. To accomplish this, we focus on being direct, candid, responsive and pragmatic. When our work reveals a potential or existing problem, we work diligently and creatively to find a practical solution. Many firms focus primarily on "issue spotting," and that is certainly an important component of what we do. That being said, however, Moore & Van Allen has differentiated itself in the investigation and financial advisory areas by partnering with our clients to provide cost-effective, end-to-end service. Oftentimes our team at Moore & Van Allen can identify challenges, suggest mitigations and then implement and monitor proposed solutions for the same fee our client might pay a different firm to simply identify the problem.
